The decisions made by those in charge of large organizations can significantly affect the interests of "stakeholders". Universities are an example of a large organization that, like governments and business corporations, affects the interests of its stakeholders. How do you think the president of a university (its chief decision-maker) should be appointed and why? In answering this question, please address the following issues: 1) who are the stakeholders in a university, 2) what role (if any) should each of these have in appointing a president, and 3) if a representative body like a board of directors should be used to appoint the president, who should appoint the directors to that board?

Social Sciences (School of Economics)

Do you think the following proposal can increase the fairness of taxation by addressing the tax avoidance strategy often used by the wealthiest members of society? Please discuss the effect such a policy might have on your own country.

[Short reading material]

In October 2021, U.S. Senator Wyden proposed a Billionaires Income Tax. His aim was to ensure billionaires pay tax every year on their wealth growth. American billionaires' wealth has grown by 70 percent, or $2.1 trillion, during the pandemic alone. Meanwhile, according to Americans for Tax Fairness and ProPublica's analysis of IRS data, they have paid no federal income taxes in recent years. The UN points out that the pandemic has deepened the gap between the rich and the poor. An inappropriate economic and social system may exacerbate this phenomenon. We can see the effects of this in U.S. where the tax code gives preference to capital income over wage income.

Japan-in-Asia Cultural Studies Program (School of Humanities)

Our program focuses on literature, film, and history. How does this differ from a social science approach, and what are the advantages of studying Japan and Asia through cultural representations?
